Power Outages & Your Electronics

With winter still hanging around, and the inevitability of more snow, it's quite possible that another power outage is just around the corner. Just a month into 2015, Edgewood has already seen half a dozen outages and even more brownouts, killing community member's computers and other electronics.

Plugging your computers, televisions, game machines and other electronics into surge protectors can help save them from an outage, but they were never meant to withstand the effects of numerous brownouts. The only way to be sure that your electronics won't get harmed from a brownout is to unplug them completely from the wall, or switch off the breaker box to your house.

Remember to call BC Hydro to report your power outage, because the more people that call, the higher the priority it will become for them.
